With beautiful summertime weather and attendees juggling in, out and around the Owen Valley Winery, the Leaderbrand family enjoyed a successful grand opening this past Saturday.

With slightly more than 600 in attendance throughout the sevenhour extravaganza, a total of 498 bottles of wine were sold, with a few flavors sold out by the end of the day. Slushies, both wine and virgin, were in high demand, with workers forced to retreat to local groceries for more supplies.

“It was a good weekend, it went better than expected. It was amazing the turnout we had; it never stopped on Saturday,” Anthony Leaderbrand said. “We were busy all the way to the very end at six o’clock... I think we could have went well into the evening if we would have had more energy.”

The day’s hottest seller was Crimson and Cream, which sold out, followed closely behind by

“I was surprised at the number of people. I heard so many comments about how great this is going to be for Owen County,” Jo Anna Leaderbrand said. “People said they were thrilled and loved the country location. They said they would be back.”

While the inside area of the winery saw a hustling winery crew tending to a jam-packed room full of eager customers, the musical sounds of the Davis Harlow Project set the mood outside for a calm and relaxing atmosphere.

“There were a lot of comments from folks encouraging us to have more entertainment as far as bands,” Anthony said. “We have a couple of other ideas in mind as long as the weather and clock permits us to do so. We’re most certainly looking at our next band and entertainment. It completely exceeded our expectations.
